DLO DAILY MEDIA UPDATE

CURRENT NEWS 17 JUNE 2011

Ackuna Introduces Its New Free Website Translation Button for Website Owners

(San Francisco Chronicle, PRWeb)

Ackuna, the internet's first cloud translation tool developed by Translation Services USA, released its free website translation button to assist in globalizing the World Wide Web.

430 Teachers Spend Summer Pursuing Learning on 7 Continents with $1.7M in Fund for Teaching Grants

(San Francisco Chronicle, PRWeb)

430 preK-12 educators will experience a summertime of immersion in a foreign language and culture thanks to fellowships from Fund for Teachers.

New Assistant Commandant takes command of the 517th Training Group Foreign Language Capabilities of the Defense Department

(DLIFLC website, 1stLT Scott Ghiringhelli)

Lt. Col Laura Ryan assumed command of the 517th Training Group and the responsibilities of the assistant commandant, Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center on June 9, 2011.

The Humanities: Fundamental but Utilitarian

(Huffington Post, David Skorton)

Skorton writes about a briefing he was privileged to moderate last month before 60 Congressional Staffers and academia. The briefing was entitled, "Addressing National Security and Other Global Challenges through Cultural Understanding." The aim was to better understand why support for the humanities is a wise investment in U.S. national security.

"Adopt" a foreign soldier from Lackland AFB

(WOAI News 4, Melissa Garcia)

Over 1,000 foreign military students are learning English at the Defense Language Institute English Learning Center at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas. A program called AMIGO (American Members of International Goodwill to Others) needs volunteer sponsors to "adopt" these students and open their homes and lives to them.

Teaching English as a Foreign Language at WOU

(YouTube, Digital Productions Services at WOU)

Coming in the fall of 2011 at Western Oregon University (WOU) is a certificate in Teaching English as a Foreign Language. See this two minute video explaining what it takes for a native speaker to teach English well.

PREVIOUS NEWS

Akaka Questions Panetta About Foreign Language Capabilities of the Defense Department

(YouTube)

Senator Akaka poses a question to Leon Panetta about his plans to increase the Defense Department's foreign language speaking abilities. The exchange took place during Panetta's confirmation hearing to succeed Robert Gates as the U.S. Secretary of Defense. Akaka is a senior member of the Armed Services Committee.

Aimless in High School, War Veteran Finds a New Mission

(Laguna Beach Independent)...Jennifer Erickson

While deployed to Iraq, Staight was struck by the confusion that reigned in determining who and where the enemy was, with the conflicting reports about whether various groups were friends or foes at any given moment. And he immediately saw how communications could be improved if soldiers knew the local language and culture. Staight devised another difficult task, to begin teaching himself Arabic, learning useful phrases. On his second tour in 2005 to patrol and guard the government center in Ramadi, the capital of Anbar province, he became the platoon linguist, though his Arabic skills were still rudimentary. He saw the benefit of directly communicating with Iraqis to help improve their lives.

Turning The iPad Into A Weapon

(Strategy Page)

For use in the combat zone, troops usually put one of the many protective covers on their smart phone, Touch, or iPad and, so far, these devices have held up well under battlefield conditions. Meanwhile, some of the software written for earlier iPods, is now available for the Touch and iPhone. This includes the VCommunicator Mobile software and libraries. This system translates English phrases into many foreign languages. Each language takes up four gigabytes per language, so they easily fit on the Touch. The software displays graphics, showing either the phrase in Arabic, or a video of a soldier making the appropriate hand gesture (there are a lot of those in Arabic), and this looks great on the Touch. There are collections of phrases for specific situations, like checkpoint, raid or patrol.

School districts are scrambling to pare budgets in response to the proposed billion-dollar cut in state funding

(Pittsburgh Post-Gazette)...Mary Niederberger

There will be larger class sizes and fewer middle and elementary school foreign language classes, high school business and consumer science courses and elementary music programs throughout the region if the preliminary budgets approved by school boards in the wake of proposed state budget cuts become final.

Dual-language schools lure students, parents back to LA Unified

(Southern California Public Radio)...Adolfo Guzman-Lopez

For years, middle- and upper-middle-class parents in parts of Los Angeles Unified have sent their children to private schools, charter schools and schools outside the district. However, a nascent dual-language program is attracting some of them back to neighborhood schools. District administrators voted Tuesday to protect hundreds of dual-language teachers from being let go in the hope that the trickle of returning parents will develop into a stream.

Breaking down the language barrier

(Mooresville Tribune)...Megan Sprague

Angela Sendler is living out her dream of teaching by sharing what she knows best -- her native tongue. Originally from Peru, Sendler has lived in Mooresville for eight years, working much of that time as a real estate agent. That's how she first discovered a need in the Lake Norman area for more bilingual residents. "I was able to be in the middle, translating for both parties and help them to reach a deal. Because of that experience, I wanted to offer a unique opportunity to Lake Norman and give Spanish instruction to kids, adults and businesses." Sendler left the real estate world to start Learn Spanish NC, a language tutoring business that offers private and group classes to all ages. She is certified with the American Tutoring Association and says she is excited to "share her passion" with local residents.

Air Force lieutenant looks before he LEAPs

(AF.mil)...1st Lt. Scott Ghiringhelli

After completing his reserve officers' training and earning a Bachelor and Master of Science in aerospace engineering at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1st Lt. Ryan Castonia could well have gone on to a great career as an engineer in the Air Force. That would have been a success story by anyone's standards, but he was not content to stop there. Beyond the natural career path as an engineer, he was slotted to be a pilot, and finally settled on a combat rescue officer, or CRO, position. He also managed to find his way to the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center as part of the Air Force's new Language Enabled Airman Program, or LEAP, despite having no prior language proficiency. He is among the first five Air Force lieutenants to come to DLIFLC and participate in LEAP. Lieutenant Castonia will graduate from the DLIFLC's Arabic-language program in July.

Cadets, midshipmen visit Horn of Africa, enhance understanding of regional affairs

(Army.mil)...Spc. 2nd Class Timothy Wilson

Six Army cadets from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., and six midshipmen from the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., arrived at the Combined Joint Task Force - Horn of Africa, May 26, 2011, to better understand the role of U.S. forces in the area. "The idea is to understand the local population," said French Colonel Frederick Gauthielr, commanding officer of the Marine 5th Legion. The visit highlighted interaction between partner nations working together in a foreign environment. Speaking to the students, Gauthielr said that interacting with his counterparts and experiencing the local cultural is invaluable.

Rising literacy in Afghanistan ensures transition

(Army.mil)...Rob McIlvaine

"Nine out of 10 were illiterate," said Lt. Gen. William B. Caldwell IV, commander of Combined Security Transition Command – Afghanistan and the NATO Training Mission. "Without literacy, we could not succeed." The Afghan National Army's 209th Corps and the U.S. Army's 10th Mountain Division's Female Engagement Team donated about $3,000 worth of school supplies to the girls' school. Kirby is the team coordinator assigned to the 10th Mountain Division on Camp Mike Spann in northern Afghanistan.

Creative Learning Academy teachers bringing language to life

(pnj.com)...Erin Kourkounis

Paulette Drasutis and Maureen Leccese have taught Spanish for more than six decades combined. And, this year, the experience and dedication of the Creative Learning Academy teachers paid off. The pair is credited with the school's success in this year's National Spanish Examinations, which are administered online to seventh- and eighth-graders. "They just make the language come alive," Thompson said. "Ms. Drasutis has very high expectations as far as reading, writing and spelling. Ms. Leccese speaks Spanish in her classroom almost exclusively. The kids have beautiful accents."